Jailed man to get new trial after DNA reveal

Courts. Tony Wright has been in prison for more than two decades for a crime that his attorneys say he did not commit. New DNA evidence, spurred by an Innocence Project investigation, may prove them right. Girl, 15, dies in shoot-out

A fistfight near Albert Einstein Medical Center turned into a fire fight around 4 p.m. that left a 15-year-old girl dead and a 19-year-old male in critical condition. The incident started with a rowdy group of juveniles heading south from Broad and Olney streets, before gunfire erupted, reports say. Police had about five individuals believed to be friends with the shooter in custody as of press time.

DNA evidence leads to new trial in 1991 murder

Nicetown. After 23 years in jail for a murder, a Philly man is getting a new trial based on DNA evidence.

A new trial was ordered on Monday for a man who has been in jail since 1991 after a conviction of a rape and murder he claims he did not commit.

Tony Wright, 43, was arrested in 1991 and charged with the slaying of Louise Talley, 77, a Nicetown resident.

But Wright and his team of attorneys claim he was coerced into confessing and that evidence was planted at his home.

"Tony is, right now, an innocent man. The prosecution now has to evaluate whether they can bring and prove a case where the evidence shows beyond a reasonable doubt that he's a guilty man," said defense attorney Sam Silver, of Schnader Harrison Segal & Lewis LLP. "He was not there. He was not involved."

Judge D. Webster Keough ordered the new trial at a hearing Monday.

Wright will remain in custody awaiting the trial.

After Wright was arrested, he allegedly confessed to police, and Talley's bloody clothing was later found under his bed.

Wright later recanted his confession, testifying at his own trial that it was coerced by detectives.

He also claimed officers had planted the bloody clothes in his home. He was convicted to life in prison in 1993.

However, recent tests found no DNA from Wright in the rape kit and only Talley's DNA on the bloody clothing.

"All the DNA evidence agrees … the DNA [on the clothes] came not from Tony Wright but from the victim," said Rebecca Lacher, of Schnader. "That is extraordinary evidence that contradicts everything that was used to convict Tony in the first place."

The New York-based Innocence Project helped file Wright's appeal.

Questionable verdict

Wright filed a Post Conviction Relief motion in 2011 seeking DNA tests on physical evidence from his trial.

- Tests on the rape kit matched Ronnie Byrd, a Philadelphia man who also lived in the Nicetown area and who died last year in South Carolina.
- The D.A.'s office still plans to prosecute Wright.

Visit Metro.us for more details of Wright's original conviction.

Suspect IDed in Schuylkill slayings

Police have issued a warrant for a suspect wanted for the double murder of two brothers dumped in the Schuylkill River last month.

Tam Le, 42, of the 500 block of East Lycoming Avenue, is wanted for his involvement in the murders of brother Vu Huynh, 31, and Viet Huynh, 28, both of Paoli, police said.

The brothers were found dead in the Schuylkill near Hunting Park Avenue on Aug. 27. A third stabbing victim, 23, survived and was found crawling on the riverbank.

Reports later indicated that the slayings may have stemmed from a $100,000 debt the Huynh brothers accepted to buy drugs but instead gambled away.

Now, a $40,000 reward is being offered for information leading to the capture of Le.

Tipsters can call 215-686-3334/5 or 911.

No arrests or criminal charges have been reported in this case.

Harrisburg

Cig tax passes state House

The $2-per-pack cigarette tax passed Monday in the state House of Representatives with a vote of 114-84.

The tax, which city officials have said could raise between $45 and $80 million for city schools, still faces another major hurdle. It needs to pass the state Senate on Wednesday. Gov. Corbett has said he would sign the bill if it passed both the House and Senate.

The money would not go to waste; schools Superintendent William R. Hite Jr. said previously the money has already been spent.

The bill, which stalled in Harrisburg all summer, includes a stipulation for charter school applicants to file an appeal directly to the state when shot down by the School Reform Commission.

Susan Gobreski, of Education Voters of Pennsylvania, said "it's about damn time" the House passed the bill.

And in regards to the Senate's upcoming vote, Gobreski said: "I think people are expecting them to do the right thing." TOMMY ROWAN

Review. DA considers charges in gay couple assault, Ramsey says

The Philadelphia Police Department concluded its investigation into the attack on a gay couple in Center City in mid-September and forwarded its findings to the district attorney's office, reports said.

The Inquirer reported that Police Commissioner Charles Ramsey said he believes there is enough evidence to convict several men who were among a group that beat the male couple on Sept. 11.

Ramsey said police feel "that there is sufficient evidence to have charges placed against some of the individuals there."

Ultimately, though, prosecutors will decide whether to prosecute.

Originally, police deemed the incident a hate crime, but state law does not include sexuality in its requirements. Ramsey said, "That needs to change." METRO

Fast food protesters get mandatory class

Center City. Protesters arrested during a Sept. 4 protest were in court on Monday.

Two weeks after a group of 11 protesters demanding a $15/hour wage at fast food restaurants were arrested, they came into court Monday to accept their punishment: a mandatory "Philosophy of Disobedience" class.

"I would do it again," Shymara Jones, 21, a Popeyes employee, said of being arrested for protesting in the middle of the street outside a McDonald's at Broad and Arch streets on Sept. 4. "I feel like I didn't do a bad thing."

She said the only consequence of the punishment would be potentially needing to take time off work.

Jamere Saunders, 25, an employee at the Broad and Allegheny McDonald's currently on suspension for reasons unrelated to the protest, also said he was proud of the protest: "It made you feel more empowered, just to sit there and fight for something you know is right."

'$15 and a union'

The protesters were part of the Philadelphia Fight for $15 and 15 Now groups, and participated in a nationally coordinated day of strikes outside McDonald's across the U.S., protesting for a higher wage and the right to unionize.

Let the Weight Be Over

For as long as I could remember, I had been overweight. I graduated from the "husky" section to the "big and tall" shops before I was even out of high school. As I got older, diets came and went; some were moderately successful, some were just expensive hobbies, and all were short-lived.

I entered my thirties a confident, young professional who believed that there was plenty of time to concentrate on getting healthy. However, I was really in the midst of a health crisis that I continued to ignore. I was 357 lbs. with a body mass index (BMI) of 46, high blood pressure, and a family history of heart disease, diabetes, and cancer. It was a trip to the E.R. with chest pain that made me realize I needed to take action!

"My weight loss journey has been life-changing!" –Jeff

My primary care physician recommended the Center for Surgical Weight Loss at Hahnemann. The team at Hahnemann provided the support and guidance I needed to change my life and improve my health.

It has been more than a year since surgery, and I've lost 165 lbs. My blood pressure is under control without medication, I no longer suffer from sleep apnea, my cholesterol is normal, and the best feeling of all – no more big and tall shops!

I couldn't have done it without the team at Hahnemann.

He was released after posting $100,000 bail.

Funds. SEPTA gets $86M grant for seven Sandy improvements

Nearly two years after Superstorm Sandy hit the northeast, SEPTA has received almost $90 million in grant money for seven improvement projects to areas most affected.

The money comes from the Federal Transit Administration Emergency Relief Program, funded after Sandy. According to SEPTA, the funds are the result of the Disaster Relief Appropriates Act of 2013.

"We'll get moving on [these projects] pretty quickly," said Andrew Busch, SEPTA spokesman.

The next move is for SEPTA to collect bids for the projects, which Busch said will happen in the coming months.

Projects include $18.7 million for railroad embankment and slope stabilization in Montgomery and Delaware counties; $3.8 million for Sharon Hill Line flood mitigation; $32 million to reinforce signal power across the Regional Rail; $9 million for a backup control center facility; $3.7 million for emergency power systems for pump rooms; $15 million for a study and improvements to the hydrologic conditions at Jenkintown; and $4.5 million to stabilize more than two miles of railroad adjacent to the Schuylkill River in Montgomery County.

CHRISTINA PACIOLLA

Further project costs

The $86.8 million grant accounts for 75 percent of the total cost of the projects, Bush said.

- The total cost of the projects is estimated to be $115 million.
- The remaining 25 percent comes from SEPTA's capital budget.

Arrests made as climate activists try to close NYSE

Climate Week. The protest comes ahead of today's United Nations Climate Summit.

Hundreds of protesters marched through New York City's financial district on Monday and blocked streets near the stock exchange to denounce Wall Street's role in raising money for businesses that contribute to climate change.

Protesters stopped traffic on Broadway south of the New York Stock Exchange. Three people had been arrested as of press time.

The demonstration, called Flood Wall Street, came on the heels of Sunday's international day of action that brought 310,000 people to the streets of Manhattan in what activists said was the largest protest ever held on climate change.

Shortly after the close of trading on the New York Stock Exchange at 4 p.m., demonstrators tried to push back metal barricades police had used to keep them away, an effort that ended when police turned pepper spray on the crowd. REUTERS

Apple sells more than 10 million new iPhones in the first three days

Demand. CEO Cook says even more iPhones would have sold if supplies had been available.

Apple Inc. said it sold more than 10 million iPhones in the first weekend after its new models went on sale on Friday, underscoring strong demand for phones with larger displays.

The company's first-quarter revenue is likely to be 9 percent higher than Wall Street estimates, based on reported sales and projected demand for the new iPhones, Piper Jaffray & Co. analyst Gene Munster wrote in a note.

Munster said he expected earnings per share to be 12 percent higher than estimates.

"While our team managed the manufacturing ramp better than ever before, we could have sold many more iPhones with greater supply and we are working hard to fill orders as quickly as possible," Apple CEO Tim Cook said.

Application questions that make you think

Application season. Some schools are getting creative with their essay prompts.

The college application essay is one of the only times during the admissions process where a student can showcase his or her personality. While many schools primarily focus their essay prompts on some variation of either "Why do you want to go to school here?" or "Tell us what makes you special," some admissions offices are getting quite creative with their essay prompts. We've compiled some of our favorites here.

University of Chicago

The University of Chicago has long been known for its rigorous course load and the strength of its philosophy department. Given that, it's no surprise that all of the school's application essay prompts encourage interested students to get a little philosophical. This option immediately stood out to us:

"Little pigs, French hens, a family of bears. Blind mice, musketeers, the Fates. Parts of an atom, laws of thought, a guideline for composition. Omne trium perfectum? Create your own group of threes, and describe why and how they fit together."

Honorable mention: Incoming students can also choose to answer the question, "Were pH an expression of personality, what would be your pH and why?"

Tufts University

The university just outside of Boston is known for its offbeat application questions. Last year, prospective students were asked one of the great questions of our time: "What does #YOLO mean to you?" High school seniors interested in Tufts currently have the option to "Celebrate [their] nerdy side" in 200 to 250 words.

Honorable mention: "Sports, science and society are filled with rules, theories and laws like the Ninth Commandment, PV=nRT, Occam's Razor and The Law of Diminishing Returns. Three strikes and you're out. In English, 'I' before 'E' except after 'C.' Warm air rises. Pick one and explain its significance to you." (Editor's note: No, we couldn't do this in 250 words either.)

Dartmouth College

Interested in applying to the Ivy League university in Hanover, New Hampshire? Dartmouth is asking prospective students to reveal some of their personality secrets. "When you meet someone for the first time, what do you want them to know about you, but generally don't tell them?" reads one question.

Honorable mention: "Every name tells a story: Tell us about your name—any name: first, middle, last, nickname—and its origin."

University of Virginia

Sometimes the hardest questions to answer are also the shortest in terms of word length. "What's your favorite word and why?" asks The University of Virginia's Admissions Office of its applicants. (They are encouraged to answer in roughly 250 words.)

Honorable mention: "To tweet or not to tweet?"

Students are encouraged to think outside the box with these questions. / DIGITAL VISION

Write a letter

Stanford University

Stanford University wants to get to know what students are like outside of the classroom. "Write a note to your future roommate that reveals something about you or that will help your roommate — and us — know you better," reads one prompt.

Honorable mention: "What matters to you and why?"

College. Older siblings have a big impact on school choices

One-third of younger siblings apply to schools their brothers and sisters attend. / PHOTOS.COM

As many high school students agonize over where to go to college, it turns out they turn to a very familiar source for advice and guidance: their older brothers and sisters.

A new study by Harvard University and the College Board finds that older siblings have a greater influence on college choice than previously believed. In fact, one out of three students end up applying to the college or university their siblings attended. The study also found that 20 percent of younger siblings actually ended up attending the same schools as their older family members.

The researchers also discovered that even when a set of siblings ended up enrolling in different schools, whole families usually attended the same types of schools, meaning that the adult children in a family all would end up enrolling in either a 2-year program or a 4-year one.

Joshua Goodman, a Harvard professor who co-authored the study, suspects that part of the reason siblings tend to gravitate toward the same schools is because older brothers and sisters can help advise younger students about financial aid and academic programs at the schools they attend. "Regardless of how exactly you interpret these results, it's clear that families play an extremely important role in the college enrollment decision," Goodman tells Inside Higher Ed.

Bloomberg: Going green will grant

Climate change. The former NYC mayor tells Metro that big cities can have an impact in the fight against global warming.

You've been appointed the United Nations Special Envoy for Cities and Climate Change. What is your mission?
U.N. Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon has asked me to ensure that the big cities put pressure on their governments for help. The majority of progress on the environment comes from the cities or the private sector. People paint their roofs white [to reflect more sunlight and keep cities cooler]; businesses install solar panels because they see an economic interest in it. However, if cities are able to reduce their electrical consumption, they cannot up electrical production. In New York, for example, the five thermal power stations must pollute less, but this should not be left to us [the United Nations]. It's [up to] the state of New York to work in this direction.

How are you going to convince them?
Hmm, call them, write to them, embarrass them, explain to people everything they need from the mayors of the world's major cities and industrial areas … and ask for help from the government. To Congress, I will explain to them that if they have a policy in favor of the environment, I could support them during their campaign. In the United States, even if I manage to convince the president, every law must be passed by Congress. It's our Constitution that demands it.

What role do you see cities having on this topic?
In a city like New York, for example, one of the challenges was to reduce air pollution. We have lowered electrical consumption to limit pollution from power stations outside the city. We also stopped what generates greenhouse gases, with buses, cars and trucks in the city becoming more environmentally friendly, as well as ensuring that buildings generate less pollution. The upside in New York is that 5,000 buildings are responsible for the highest proportion of pollution. And we have already converted 50 percent of them to use natural gas rather than oil. We have helped residents paint their roofs white. Today, 80 percent of roofs are white because we know that it

Question

Why have you involved yourself in this?

As mayor of New York City, I had the obligation of working to improve the quality of life of our residents. And on this point, the environment is an important part. … I have equally preoccupied myself with questions on public health, and the two issues are intimately linked. I have two daughters, grandchildren, and I want to build a better life for them.

is a method of lowering power consumption. We also encourage the installation of solar panels. In New York, the buildings are responsible for 80 percent of the pollution, against 20 percent for public transport. What's more, people walk and use public transportation more than in any other city.

What did you do as mayor of New York that you're most proud of?
I always find it difficult to answer this question. But I would cite a number tied to health: 8.4 million people have gained three years of life expectancy during my 12 years in office. That's an incredible figure. [Americans should] come and live in New York – they will live three years longer. And it's thanks to the reduction in air pollution, cycling lanes and the installation of smoke detectors in apartments.

"The majority of progress on the environment comes from the cities or the private sector." Bloomberg

Which city appears exemplary in the fight against global warming?
Every city has problems with finding a solution. I cannot find one that stands out of the crowd. We form a network of 69 cities [in the C40 Cities Climate Leadership Group.] They inspire each other and see what applies to them. What I can say is that most of the measures implemented in New York originated elsewhere.

CHRISTOPHE JOLY
editor-in-chief Metro France

UN. Ban Ki-moon: 'Climate change is an issue for all of us'

Have you wondered about the weather recently? Does it seem strange to you? If so, you're not alone. People all over the world are noticing. A few hot days or a cold snap may not seem much to worry about – but what about extreme storms, raging floods or a prolonged heat wave? People lose their lives. Businesses lose their profits. In the worst cases, the economic ripples are felt around the world as crops fail, food prices rise and people go hungry. These are the consequences of a disturbed climate.

Climate change is an issue for all of us. It is happening now, so we have to act today to reduce greenhouse gas emissions and strengthen resilience to the changes to come. As both a consumer and a voter, you have an important role in your community. My message to you is: Make your voice heard and your actions count. Change is in the air. Solutions exist. The race is on. It's time to lead.

Act now

The more we delay, the more we will pay.

- But if we act decisively now, the benefits will be significant, not just in averting the worst impacts of climate change, but in reaping the benefits of cleaner air and the economic growth that building a greener economy can bring.

BAN KI-MOON IS SECRETARY-GENERAL OF THE UNITED NATIONS.

Do you need a credit card to build credit?

Money. Find out the pros and cons of having a credit card, plus ways to establish credit without one.

According to a recent Bankrate survey, six out of 10 people in their 20s don't have a credit card. / HUNTSTOCK

A new survey conducted by Bankrate found that 63 percent of Americans in their 20s don't have a credit card, and only 35 percent of people over 30 have one. With so many cautionary tales about credit card debt, yet much talk about the importance of establishing a good credit score, millennials are getting mixed messages.

Credit cards aren't for everyone. If you're responsible, a good planner and have the ability to meet more than the minimum balance of your card each month, credit cards are a good tool for building credit. But if you're using credit cards to buy things you're uncertain you can actually afford, are an impulse buyer or have a history of missing payment deadlines, it's better not to have one at all.

When used correctly, having a credit card has many benefits, according to Business Insider. If you need to buy something the day before you get paid, you can use your credit card without worrying, and then you can just pay it off at the end of the month with your paycheck money.

If you're planning to purchase a home or a car, a credit card can help you establish the good credit score you will need to do so. But if you don't think having a credit card is the best decision for you, there are other ways to build credit. Having a couple of bank accounts that you use regularly and paying your monthly bills on time contribute to establishing good credit. Bills can include student loans, utilities, rent, cell phones and anything else that requires a regular payment.

TIMOTHY SYKES

Timothy Sykes is a millionaire stock trader and entrepreneur.

3 Takes on Alibaba, worth $230 billion

The stocks for Alibaba, the giant Chinese e-commerce company, went public last week, and my inbox is stuffed with questions asking for my opinion. Here, three different takes.

Take No. 1: It's the most profitable in e-commerce

Many Americans mistakenly believe Amazon.com has this title. Alibaba has a quarter of the employees and roughly one-tenth the revenue of Amazon, but its profit margins are an astounding 50 percent compared to Amazon's 1 percent. That's why Amazon is valued at "only" $150 billion while Alibaba is valued at $230 billion. We Americans need to get over thinking we're No. 1 in every category and realize emerging countries such as China have huge populations that want to purchase goods on the Internet.

Take No. 2: Foreign markets have different rules

As many small-cap and penny stock investors have learned the hard way, Chinese companies are not subject to the same strict SEC and accounting requirements as U.S. companies, therefore all of their revenue and profit numbers and forecasts must be taken with a grain of salt. I spent a month in China and learned anything you make will be copied and sold at a massive discount to the ravenous Chinese consumer. It's truly buyer beware in China and in Chinese stocks.

Larry Ellison stepped down as CEO of Oracle but will remain CTO. It was more a symbolic gesture to give credit to others' hard work — good for him!

So much for the whole world loving democracy and independence; I'm saddened to see Scotland vote no instead of yes, but I understand the temptation of the status quo.

Take No. 3: The stock market is a battle

A case can be made that Alibaba is conservatively valued, even at $230 billion, because they're fast growing, profitable and their target market is incredibly large and has devoted customers. But you can also say that the market in China is like the "Wild West," with great volatility and lingering questions about the Chinese government, freedom, censorship and competition.

My overall take on Alibaba, however, is that I have no idea what it will do. It's OK to be unsure in the stock market. You'll go much further in business if you're honest and don't try to pretend that you know everything.

What he's into this week

The NFL's sponsors are now coming down hard on the league for their leniency and absolute bungling of important domestic violence issues.

I received my new iPhone 6, which comes with a feature to help me set the correct time and date on my two $30,000 watches that I just can't figure out!

I like how many Apple fanboys have ripped on the new Apple Watch. It's good to see honesty take center stage for what seems to be a truly disappointing new product.

1 Emma Watson not just a pretty face (but check out her brother!)

Ladies and gentlemen, Emma Watson is your new feminist icon. The "Harry Potter" star and U.N. Goodwill Ambassador gave an impassioned speech at the United Nations headquarters this weekend to launch the HeForShe campaign, looking to help turn men into advocates as well. "I decided that I was a feminist; this seemed uncomplicated to me. But my recent research has shown me that feminism has become an unpopular word. Women are choosing not to identify as feminists. Apparently, [women's expression is] seen as too strong, too aggressive, anti-men, unattractive," Watson said during her speech. "Why has the word become such an unpopular one? I think it is right I am paid the same as my male counterparts. I think it is right that I should make decisions about my own body. I think it is right that women be involved on my behalf in the policies and decisions that affect my life. I think it is right that socially, I am afforded the same respect as men."

I, of course, have no joke to insert here, but I just wanted to point out that Watson is awesome. Though I was a little distracted by the presence of her ludicrously attractive brother seated behind her. Well, hello there, Alex Watson!

2 Heigl not following basic Instagram protocol for celebrities

Maybe sometimes we're too quick with our instinct to jump all over Katherine Heigl and criticize her any time she does, well, anything. For instance, when Heigl posted a photo of herself and co-star Chris McKenna from the set of her new series, "State of Affairs," with the caption "Santa Clarita played the part of Kabul, Afghanistan today," several critics were quick to point out she was standing in front of posters from Iraq. Well, Heigl wants you to back the hell off, OK? "Some eagle-eyed fans spotted that the posters in the background of my photo yesterday were from Iraq not Afghanistan," Heigl says in a statement. "Our secret is out! The sets we use on 'State of Affairs' represent many different countries around the world. We were actually shooting scenes in 'Kabul,' but for the selfie had wandered into 'Iraq' by simply crossing the street. Movie magic, people!"

OK, fine. But now can we get upset about the fact that the photo in question is not actually a selfie? Get it together, Heigl!

3 Italian directors say Sharon Stone 'slightly declining'

Sharon Stone is getting a bad rap from the Italian filmmaking duo Pupi and Antonio Avati, with whom she worked on the upcoming "Golden Boy." At a press conference in Rome, the Avatis recounted some diva-ish behavior during production, according to the Hollywood Reporter. "On set there were more than 200 paparazzi. There her ego definitively inflated. It is the classic pattern with these American actresses who are slightly declining." Ouch. Pupi says Stone complained to her manager and refused to return to the set until the photographers left: "The thing that I found most absurd is that she had to call to the States and to close herself in a car, instead of coming to ask us directly."

4 Get 'Mad' with jealousy at Jennifer Westfeldt

While the rest of us have to wait until next year to find out how "Mad Men" ends, there's at least one person not working on the show who knows: Jon Hamm's longtime girlfriend, Jennifer Westfeldt. "Oh, she knows. I tell her everything," Hamm tells Us Weekly. I imagine series creator Matt Weiner has bugged their place just to make sure she doesn't tell a soul.

David Bowie goes to the movies

With the doc "David Bowie is" playing local movie theaters tonight, we look at the legend's greatest screen performances.

'The Man Who Fell to Earth'

Bowie had appeared in an experimental short, "The Image," in 1969, but didn't make a proper film crossover until the mid-'70s. Naturally, he played an alien: a being seeking a way to save his arid planet who instead gets distracted by the ways of man. And as directed by Nicolas Roeg, who loves elliptical editing and lots of zooms, it's a film even more radical than Bowie's music at the time.

'Merry Christmas, Mr. Lawrence'

In "The Man Who Fell to Earth," Bowie was playing on his image. Turns out he can be a very good thespian. One of his other too few lead roles lies in this intense POW drama, with Bowie as a prisoner whose relations with a sadistic Captain border on the homoerotic. Alas, Bowie has said he dislikes screen acting, as he finds the production pace too slow.

'The Hunger'

Audiences were lured into this MTV-style vampire opus by the much-reported sex scene between Catherine Deneuve and Susan Sarandon. But the real stand-out is Bowie's brief performance as Deneuve's longtime companion. He's only in the first 30 minutes, having suddenly discovered he's rapidly aging. But it might be his best performance, one teeming with regret and elegance, maintaining dignity in the face of coming death.

'Labyrinth'

One of the great all-star teams of movies featured Jim Henson, Terry Jones and Bowie, who's made to look like a leopard as a "Goblin King" trying to woo a teenager (Jennifer Connelly). His plan? Kidnap her baby brother and trap her in a puppet-laden maze. (The '80s were weird.) Bowie is all rock star here, and it's one of the only films he's been in that actually uses his music, including the amazing "Magic Dance."

'Basquiat'

Many have attempted to portray Andy Warhol, but Bowie — who wrote a song for him on his 1971 album "Hunky Dory" — comes the closest to embodying him without lapsing into impersonation-heavy parody. In Julian Schnabel's film, he plays the artist in his later years — a shadow of his former self, yet still aloof as he sucks the young and doomed Jean-Michel Basquiat (Jeffrey Wright) into his questionable orbit.

'The Prestige'

For its first hour, Christopher Nolan's dueling magicians classic builds up the introduction of Nikola Tesla. When he finally arrives, not only is he David Bowie, but he gets one of the all-time best movie entrances, walking through an electromagnetic field. Later Tesla reflects on his career, which for Bowie surely hit close to home: "The first time I changed the world, I was hailed as a visionary. The second time, I was asked politely to retire."

It's Banned Books Week

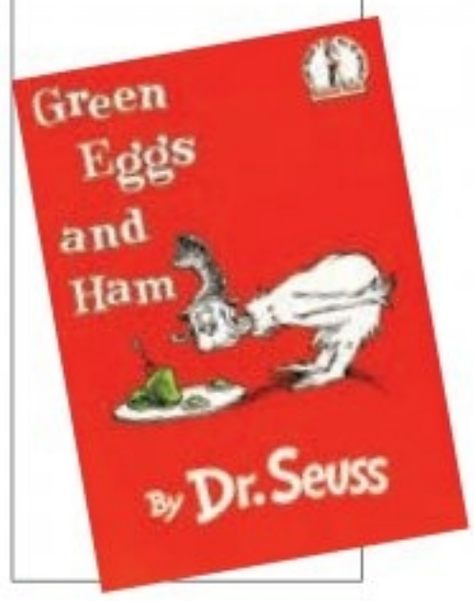
Baffling banned books

In a time when we can read "Fifty Shades of Grey" on the subway unabashed, the fact that books such as "Green Eggs and Ham" and "Where's Waldo?" were at one time banned from schools is pretty crazy. They aren't the only shockers that made the list. Here, we round up some of our favorites:

Some churches held book burnings when "Harry Potter" first came out. / GETTY IMAGES

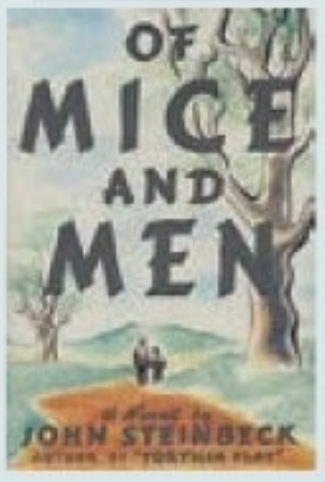
1 'Green Eggs and Ham' by Dr. Seuss

According to the book "Seuss Facts," this classic was banned briefly in the 1990s because of supposed homosexual innuendos.



2 'Of Mice and Men' by John Steinbeck

This book is one of the most frequently banned due to racial slurs, profanity, violence and the "absence of traditional values," a claim made most recently in 2005 by Normal Community High School in Illinois.



How to celebrate this week

There are many ways to get involved in Banned Books Week all over the country. Here are a few:

- Virtual Read-Outs: Readers from New York to California can form local groups to take part in read-outs — a reading of challenged/banned books — or uniting their voices by making YouTube videos giving a shout-out to the virtues of being free to read.
- Edible Banned Books Festival: On Tuesday at Syracuse University, people can submit entries of edible representations of various banned books. We'll take "Green Eggs and Ham" over an "Of Mice and Men" sandwich any day!
- Designed to Deliver: Students enrolled in the course Psychology of Color at the Fashion Institute of Technology are each designing a poster to educate students throughout New York City, as part of a class project.

Want to get kids to read a book? Tell them it was once against the law to read it. This week marks the 32nd celebration of Banned Books Week, a time when librarians, booksellers, authors, publishers, teachers and readers come together as a united front to celebrate and protect the freedom to read.

How it all started

Banned Books Week began in 1982 when it was founded by First Amendment and library activist Judith Krug. At that time there was a sudden swell in the number of books being challenged within schools, bookstores and libraries. Banned Books Week always takes place during the last week in September and serves as a reminder to everyone of the importance of free expression of ideas, as well as uninhibited access to information. It's sponsored by groups such as the American Booksellers Association, Freedom to Read Foundation and the American Library Association.

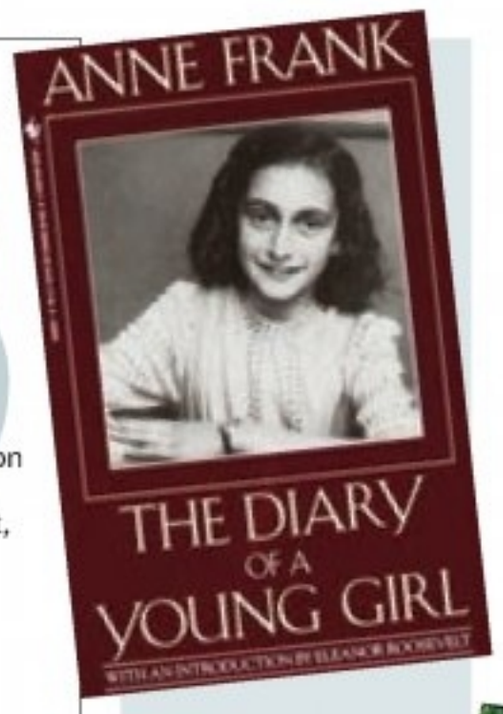
3 'Where's Waldo?' by Martin Handford

In the 1990s, a book in this series was one of the most banned because of a cartoon woman slightly showing her breast, says the Banned Books Awareness organization.



4 'Anne Frank: The Diary of a Young Girl'

In 2010, this book was banned in Virginia public schools due to its "sexual content and homosexual themes." Several schools have also banned it because it's a "real downer," reports The Nation.

5 'The Giving Tree' by Shel Silverstein

In 1998 it was banned from a public library in Colorado because it was considered "sexist."

Teachers, listen up

How to celebrate in the classroom

Read and respond: Pick a challenged or banned book and have your class read it, or just a passage of it, and then talk about why some people wanted the book banned.

Get creative: Put students' brains to the test by having them create their own comic book or short story that celebrates the First Amendment.

Character essay: Have your students select a character from a banned book and assign an essay where they must write as the character, defending him or herself from being censored.

Divide and conquer: Split the class into two groups. Have one side argue why schools should be able to read banned books and have the other make a case as to why the books students read should be approved by the school board. A lively argument from both sides will help them understand the issue from multiple viewpoints.

Back to basics: Devote a lesson to teaching and talking about the five freedoms of the First Amendment and the notion of censorship. Then have the students write a few sentences explaining how they personally employ this right, citing examples from their everyday lives.

Needtobreathe: From broken up to resurrected

Revival. The band talks about the personal ups and downs they went through while recording their latest album.

A year and a half ago, the three band members who make up Needtobreathe thought their touring days were done. They were at work on their fifth album, but tensions between band members — particularly brothers Bo and Bear Rinehart — were at an all-time high. Things just weren't working.

"[Bo and Bear] had separate dressing rooms and weren't getting along at all. They were fighting a lot," bass player Seth Bolt says, citing a fistfight the guys got into back stage at a New York City show.

"I think we were chasing success," Bo Rinehart says. "We felt like we had to take every opportunity that came our way and we got lost in it. We started putting all that stuff way above family."

So, in the middle of recording the album, the band broke up. Bo and Bear didn't speak for two months, and Bolt didn't have much contact with them either.

When the three reunited a few months later, they vowed to do things differently, such as putting family first. They finished the album, "Rivers in the Wasteland," and are back on the road. Listening to the album from start to finish, the early songs reveal the tension while the later songs reflect the resolve.

Though the band is signed to a secular record label and refer to themselves as a rock band rather than a "Christian rock band," many of the band's lyrics are about God, and they speak openly about their Christian beliefs. Bolt and Rinehart both say their faith evolved while recording the album.

"[At the beginning of recording], I felt like we were in a dark place, like a desert, and there wasn't a whole lot of hope in it. ... There is something new and fresh that happened to the band. ... I think that represents a new hope and is kind of a miracle," Rinehart says.

The band says now they're stronger than ever. / SULLY SULLIVAN

Behind the music

On the album name

"Originally we were going to call the album 'Wasteland,'" Bolt reveals. "But when we finished it, we realized that wouldn't be appropriate because we weren't in that sort of wasteland headspace anymore. Something definitely happened to it during the process, and there's a stream of life that was injected in there. That's why we changed the name to 'Rivers in the Wasteland.'"

3 Best spots for fall foliage

Nature. Late September is the ideal time for leaf peeping in the Northeast.

Wherever you are, you don't have to travel far to take in the phenomenon of fall foliage. All across the U.S., deciduous trees put on dazzling displays of color, making leaf peeping one of the easiest and least expensive sightseeing options. Check out Fodor's picks for the best destinations in the Northeast to see fall foliage.

The Catskills, New York

The 6,000 square miles in southeastern New York known as the Catskills are home to six major river systems and 35 mountain peaks over 3,500 feet. It's a year-round destination, but the area is most vibrant in the fall, when yellows, oranges and reds electrify the thickly wooded hillsides. Many of the region's historic villages host festivals and craft fairs alongside bountiful farmers' markets and pick-your-own orchards.

When to go: The last two weeks in September through mid- to late-October are prime time.

Where to stay: The Catskills are fabled for their charming bed and breakfasts. For more of a retreat experience, head to the Inn at Lake Joseph, a 16-room country resort located on a 250-acre private lake.

The Berkshires, Massachusetts

The essential escape for urbanites in New York City, Boston and Philadelphia, the Berkshires provide world-class foliage viewing alongside notable art and culture. Narrow winding roads connect mountain hamlets set against a forested backdrop of crimson, yellow and nearly every hue in between, making for the most beautiful gallery hopping or antiquing trip of your life. Or, spend the weekend at one of the region's storied spas, soaking in the sweeping autumn views.

When to go: Fall foliage season in the Berkshires begins in late September and typically peaks during Columbus Day weekend in mid-October. There's still color to behold in late October, but don't wait until November.

Where to stay: Located on 117 acres in Lenox, the elegant Blantyre hotel was built in 1902 and modeled after a castle in Scotland.

Vermont

Green Mountain Byway

The maple, birch and beech trees lining this 11-mile route bisecting Vermont put on one of the most dazzling displays of color in New England. The drive from quaint Waterbury, home of Ben & Jerry's Ice Cream, to ski resort Stowe passes through two state forests and three state parks. In Stowe, the ski area gondola offers a bird's-eye view of the forested slopes and easy access to hiking.

When to go:
The season begins the second week of September and peaks the first week in October.

Where to stay:
In Stowe, the Top-notch Resort sits on 120 acres overlooking Mt. Mansfield, Vermont's highest mountain at 4,393 feet. An impressive trail system surrounds the property, which is perfect for hiking and horseback riding.

Art imitates life for Bethenny Frankel

Story time.
The celebrity's new children's book is about how her daughter and dog didn't always get along.

Bethenny Frankel is already working on the next "Cookie Meets Peanut" book. / ARTHUR COHEN

Bethenny Frankel has conquered television, the cocktail industry and the self-help genre. Now, she's adding another accomplishment to her résumé: children's book author. Hitting store shelves tomorrow is Frankel's first kids' book, "Cookie Meets Peanut," which was inspired by her own pooch and daughter.

In the book, Cookie the dog gets mom's undivided attention. That is, until a new baby comes along. "Years ago, I met a mom at the gym who had just had a baby, and she told me, when you have a baby, your dog becomes a dog. Before you have kids, your dog is your baby, but when you have a real baby, your dog becomes a dog. This book is about that new dynamic that takes place," Frankel explains.

She hopes that readers will regard it as more than just a cute story they can enjoy with their kids, and that it will help families make sense of that new transition. "I worried my dog wouldn't want to have anything to do with my daughter; but then it turned out being the other way around," Frankel says about how the adjustment went down in her own home.

Now that her daughter, Bryn, is 4, Frankel says she enjoys having a pet more. "Older kids appreciate dogs more. They see them on TV ... and they're proud they have one, too," she says.

Her to-do list

On what's next

Frankel has a cocktail book coming out soon and is working on a second "Cookie Meets Peanut" book. When asked how she balances being a mom with her intense work schedule, Frankel says no one can ever be perfectly balanced. "You sleep and do yoga when you can," she says.

Everyone stands by the Earth

Re: 'Ban Ki-Moon, DiCaprio march in world climate demonstration' (Metro, Sept. 22) Your caption for the picture only names Leonardo DiCaprio, who marched with Indigenous People from the Onondaga Nation. Beside him are Oren Lyons and Chief Faithkeeper Sid Hill. Their banner reads, "Respect Aboriginal and Treaty Rights: Shut Down the Tar Sands." Their message to us all: "The Onondaga Nation leaders are given the responsibility of making decisions for the seven generations unborn. It was clear with our Mother Earth in need of help, that leaders and people from the Onondaga Nation made the trip south to be a part of the People's Climate March."

TOM ROTHSCHILD, VIA EMAIL

The Earth's climate is getting warmer, and humans are responsible. That's not my opinion, that's a fact supported by more than 97 percent of climate scientists. We've already made a good start by making our cars and trucks more efficient while starting to limit pollution from the dirtiest power plants, the chief contributor of America's climate change pollution. To prevent the devastating effects of the climate crisis, we should all support these efforts.

Kelce to have surgery

The Eagles' already battered offensive line took a big hit Sunday when center Jason Kelce left a 37-34 win over Washington with an injury to his abdomen. It was revealed Monday he would be out at least 4-6 weeks recovering from a related surgery. David Molk, who filled in vs. the Redskins, will be the starting center in Kelce's absence.

FOLES IS REAL DEAL

The Voice of Philly Sports

ANGELO CATALDI
SPORTS@METRO.US

Nick Foles leads the entire NFL in total passing yards with 978 so far in 2014. / GETTY IMAGES

Sometime on Sunday afternoon, Nick Foles took his rightful place next to Ron Jaworski, Randall Cunningham and Donovan McNabb as the next franchise quarterback of the Eagles. That's right. The debate is finally over. Foles is the man.

Maybe it was the back-to-back touchdown passes late in the second quarter to Jordan Matthews that made Foles' ascension official. Or it might have been those brilliant throws to Jeremy Maclin in the final minutes that moved the Eagles ahead for good. Most likely, it was the way he absorbed a cheap shot and still led his team to a thrilling 37-34 win over Washington.

From his first appearance here three seasons ago, Nick Foles has been a source of contention among Eagles fans. Even his historic quarterback rating of 119 last season — better than Peyton Manning's — left room for criticism, an undercurrent that only grew louder after two lackluster efforts to start the current season.

But Foles did something Sunday that won over even the biggest cynics. He showed how tough he was. Behind a makeshift line missing four of five starters and facing a defense that had 10 sacks last week, Foles refused to go down behind the line. He avoided a hellacious pass rush all day without yielding a single sack.

Then, when he was blindsided by nose tackle Chris Baker late in the game — as dirty a play as you will see in the kinder, gentler NFL — Foles gathered himself and saved an important division victory.

Visit Metro.us to delve into Cataldi's mind with "Idle Thoughts."

With his gee-whiz style, it is easy to see Foles as a soft player, but he is not. He is every bit the kind of warrior Jaworski was, absorbing punishment without complaint. His resiliency is reminiscent of Cunningham, minus the athleticism. Foles is no less courageous than McNabb, who once played half a game on a broken ankle.

What Foles has that none of those others did is a bond with his teammates that transcends big plays and smart decisions. As Foles lay in obvious pain on the ground after the Baker assault, Jason Peters attacked the nose tackle, prompting an ejection and leaving the already depleted offensive line even more vulnerable.

Peters said he did it because turning the other cheek was not a logical option at that point. Allowing a thug like Baker — who was expelled from Penn State in 2008 for fighting — to pummel Foles would have been a sign of disrespect for the team leader, and for what coach Chip Kelly has been building here over the past year-plus.

Monday, I asked Kelly if he approved of Peters' decision to retaliate for the cheap shot.

"Next question," he said.

In other words, it was fine with the coach.

Cataldi on Foles

Nick Foles has played most of his life for the distinction he now owns with the Eagles. He is the new franchise quarterback. He is the man.

Williams' opinion not widely held

NFL. Cary Williams gave an assessment of the Eagles' practice regimen that is not held by everyone in the locker room.

Chip Kelly and Cary Williams buried the hatchet Monday, a day after Williams, the Eagles' outspoken defensive back, told reporters it was Kelly's grueling practices that have caused the Eagles to fall short of putting together 60 complete minutes.

"He was frustrated," Kelly said. "I have no issues with Cary. Cary's just a competitor. He always wants to play a perfect game. He'll tell you he just got frustrated."

But other Eagles players have different opinions. The tough, breakneck pace of practice is beneficial to several players.

"It comes down to the mentality of our team," safety Malcolm Jenkins said after the win Sunday. "We train to finish; we train at a fast pace so at the end of practice we are just as fast as we are at the beginning."

Jordan Matthews, back after a Week 1 win, had similar thoughts on the Eagles' preparation.

"Coach Kelly does a great job of making sure we practice hard," the wideout said. "So our twos and threes get a lot of reps. Everyone gets reps. So we know that whoever is playing is prepared. We were able to do that today."

Williams claimed that other players shared his view, and no doubt some do, but Kelly said the coaching staff knows what each player is comfortable with and that they monitor everyone closely.

"Every player [meets daily] with the strength coaches ... in the morning," Kelly said. "We sit down with every guy, and [ask] 'where are you, what do you need?' ... Everybody is different."

Fight club

The big story from Sunday's game was the fight between Jason Peters, the Redskins' Chris Baker and others.

- Pro Football Talk reported that no suspensions are expected, but that "a ton of fines" are, according to a source.

Penn Medicine

There's a better way to look at how the body moves.

ONLY PENN IS PUTTING IT IN MOTION.

We've created Penn's Musculoskeletal Center to be a place unlike any other in the region, designed to keep you in motion, from your first appointment through every phase of your personalized treatment and beyond. It houses Penn's orthopaedic surgeons, rheumatologists, pain specialists, and physical therapists all in one place—connected to each other and to you. And our perspective is broader than just surgery or any other single therapy.

It's a total body perspective.
